On the edge of the world - isolation and globalization in a Breton fishport

Le Guilvinec France is the primary family firm fishing port in France. This region, also known as Finisterre - end of the world- has moved in and out of the center of trade and social networks over the course of the last several centuries. What is it about this place, and other resource dependent communities, that causes this in and out of isolation phenomena will be the guiding question of this presentation.
